With delectable accolades such as "audible chocolate" (Costa Rica News), critics around the globe recognize Roger Wright as one of the great modern piano virtuosos.

The Washington Post praised a recital at the National Gallery of Art for its "extraordinary freshness, subtlety and originality of thought", and further noted "even more impressive is the rare spontaneity and vitality in his playing- and the sense of a voraciously hungry mind."

Originally from Houston, Texas, Wright studied with Carol Barwick, John and Nancy Weems, Ruth Tomfohrde, Abbey Simon, Horatio Gutierrez, and John Perry. Now living in southern California, he founded The Music School at Foothill in Arcadia, which dedicates itself to the nurturing of young musicians.

Refreshments will be served after the concert.
